Interior Design | Site Management | Research | Sales (60 - 100%)

You are an interior architect, interior designer, or site manager, or you are about to graduate in one of these fields?

You have ideas and determination; you're the hen that can lay golden eggs? Additionally, you possess an understanding of the business case and place your creativity in the service of our clients, rather than seeking only self-fulfillment.

At UnicornKids.com, we are pioneers in crafting imaginative spaces for children, ranging from daycare facilities and schools to kids' clubs and pediatric clinics. Our collaboration extends to the German baukind.de, further enhancing our reach and impact.

A substantial segment of our service portfolio involves the identification of optimal locations through research, catering to the needs of our clients. Simultaneously, we delve into the feasibility aspects, encompassing permits, comprehensive location analyses, and a robust business rationale.

A fundamental facet of your role will encompass introducing our services to novel clientele, including medical practitioners, museums, hospitality establishments, among others. This endeavor naturally commences with the initial stage of identifying potential leads.

While every project entails a creative blueprint, it's worth noting that often, this is seamlessly interwoven into the architectural framework. This strategic alignment is largely attributed to budget considerations on the client's end, making it an integral facet of site management procedures.

In your role as site manager, you'll be responsible for compiling bidding documents and organizing contract awards. And then, asserting yourself on the construction site, because missing a deadline is not an option for us.

If this profile resonates with you (regardless of gender), we eagerly anticipate receiving your application accompanied by your envisioned compensation.

Presently, our operational hub is based at a coworking space, near Kunsthaus Zürich.
